

a member of the Sunbury Baseball Club, and Miss Maud Lamb, one of Sunbury's most estimable young women, took a trip to Elmira, N. Y., and were quietly married without the knowledge of family or friends.

According to the prearranged plan, during the progress of the first game of ball with Milton, in Sunbury on Thursday afternoon, Captain Moorhead complained of being ill during the sixth inning and retired from the game.

Later he left the ball ground and when he arrived at the hotel where he boarded, all trace of sickness left, as he hurriedly packed his suit case preparatory to a journey.

As a part of the plan, Miss Lamb went to Northumberland on Thursday afternoon on the pretext of visiting a friend, her real purpose being to board the train at that place and join the gallant ball tosser.

Captain Moorhead purchased the tickets at the Sunbury station and left on the 5.15 train.

At Northumberland he met his intended bride and nothing happened to mar any of the plans.

Mr Lamb, when he learned what had happened, hurried to Northumberland and found the story to be correct. He returned to Sunbury on Friday afternoon alone.

Captain Moorhead, during the past two years, has been a student at State College.
