OTHER DEATHS

Miss Charlotte Moorhead will make her last journey to her "old home town" tomorrow, Wednesday, morning. Mrs. Charlotte Clark Adams will bring her remains to be interred in the Clark plot at Oakland cemetery; after the funeral services in the chapel of the Presbyterian Church at two o'clock in the afternoon.

Miss Moorhead, known to her old friends and acquaintances for many years as "Aunt Lottie," passed away at the home of her favorite niece and namesake, Mrs. Adams, Monday afternoon, February 29, surrounded by the members of the Adams family, having been stricken by paralysis only a few days before.

She will be especially remembered while living with the family of the late Justice Silas M. Clark in the "old homestead" on Sixth street, for almost fifty years. Her most attractive personality, kindness of spirit, her many charitable actions and broad-minded outlook on life in its many phases distinguished her among the women of her day and generation. She was eighty-two years old and enjoyed unusual comfort and happiness, having extraordinary good health during all those years.

Miss Moorhead was the last of the family of William Moorhead, late of Indiana, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. He enjoyed the distinction of being the first white male child born in the then small village of Indiana and afterwards was editor of the first newspaper published in the county of Indiana. Later in life he became the genial landlord and owner of the "Indiana Tavern," which stood on the same site as the present Indiana House and was the birthplace of our beloved "Aunt Lottie" Moorhead.

It will be a comfort and a pleasure to her many relatives and friends to recall her to their memory and to be assured she is peacefully at rest for all eternity.
