

Lynn Moorhead

(Continued from page one)

magazine—True Detective. The story was "The Appalling Crime" portraying Canada's worst air tragedy, when twenty-three people were killed by a time bomb placed in a C-47 airliner. Ind. Countian

He was on the cover, in May, of "Young Indian," a children's adventure magazine, complete with hair-raising tales of early American Indians—"Young Eagle owed a handsome peace-pipe tomahawk." He was in Esquire, men's magazine, and numerous others. Aug 1950.

In the meantime, Lynn was breaking into the new field of television. He was understudy to Robert Montgomery for his "Ride The Pink Horse" on the N. B. C. network and before he left for the Pacific he was on the verge of signing a contract to appear in the supporting cast of "Studio One," a program that is seen here in Indiana over WDTV, Pittsburg.
